

The Fosse Batheaston

This Victorian villa in a village location has been altered on numerous occasions in the past, and the client purchased the house in a state of disrepair. The design concept of the new extension and refurbishment work is to reverse the orientation of the house to create the entrance to the rear north elevation, allowing the elegant south façade and garden to become a private sanctuary for the family. The proposed double-height entrance hall will look over a newly excavated courtyard, lined with rubble bath stone walls. One wall penetrates through the new glass screen to form an internal first floor gallery linking inside with outside. A further phase of work creates new accommodation over the garage.
